Logic

1. He was looking at a picture of his son.
2. It would grow larger. As the iron donut expands, it keeps the same proportions it had before it was heated. The same principle applies when one cannot open a stubborn metal lid on a jar. By heating the lid under hot water, the lid (including the inner circumference) expands, allowing it to be removed easily.
3. Thirty. The trick is to work backward. On his fourth and final sale, he sells half of his inventory plus one more, leaving him with no cars. Therefore, we know that his final sale was two cars. On the third sale, he sold half of six, plus one more, leaving him with two cars for the fourth sale. On the second sale, he sold half of 14 cars plus one more to leave him with six before the third sale. On the first sale, he sold half his inventory of 30 cars plus one to leave him with 14 cars before the second sale.
